Zoom In

1000 Details in Architecture offers impressive visual bullets of the world's best in detail-oriented interior and architectural designs.

Details, as anyone who has ever tried to assemble a flat-pack bookshelf well knows, matter. And in the book 1000 Details in Architecture, design experts Alex Sanchez Vidiella, Julio Fajardo Herrero and Sergi Costa Duran collaborate to zoom in on the constructive details of structures, showcasing a range of elements from a hint of striking colour in an all-white space to an unexpected protrusion in an otherwise straightforward building, and an intricate pattern on a wrought-iron gate. The book features a visual and theoretical analysis of why attention to the little things is important in contemporary design, and with its easy-to-read, 295-page bullet examples divided into 15 chapters, makes developing an eye for detail a pleasure rather than a chore.

Wooden Stairs by TAF Arkitektkontor

This wooden staircase conceptualised by Swedish-firm TAF Arkitektkontor for a private residence in Stockholm features angled steps made from stacked pine boxes for a low-budget, whimsical solution to a narrow attic accessway.

Sculptural Mailboxes by One Plus Partnership

Award-winning Hong Kong interior design firm One Plus Partnership transforms the often-dull apartment-building mailroom with a design for a Shenzhen apartment block that draws on the colours and forms of a bamboo forest.

Rainbow Panels 123DV Architectuur & Consult BV

Another form-and-function merger in a Netherlands loft. Not only does it bring colour to the area, it also serves as a bedroom door, a cover for a shelving unit, and a sound-proofing installation.

Cube Cell Residence by HSH Architekti

Making use of 24 cube cells stacked together to form a rectangular home, this high-concept space designed by Petr Hajek, Tomas Hradečný, and Jan Sepka features concrete exterior walls to give it an industrial façade that contrasts with the soft textures within.
